Jennifer Laszlo Mizrahi to Step Down as CEO of The Israel Project Board Moving Quickly to Find New Leader

Jennifer Laszlo Mizrahi

Washington, Feb. 1 – Jennifer Laszlo Mizrahi, Founder and President of The Israel Project (TIP), an independent, non-partisan educational organization that provides information about Israel and the Middle East to the media, policy-makers and the public, has announced her intention to step down after almost 10 years in the job.

Mizrahi spearheaded the growth of The Israel Project and built it into a major presence in the United States and around the world. TIP chairman Len Leader, in accepting Mizrahi's resignation, announced the formation of a three-member search committee to be chaired by board member Richard Perry that will move quickly to find a new CEO for the organization.

While expressing regret at Mizrahi's departure, Leader said he was confident that the organization, which now has a staff of 75, had put together a seasoned and highly professional senior management team that will allow it to thrive under new leadership.

"We all believe in this wonderful organization that we have been part of and which has done such amazing work and made a real difference for Israel and the Jewish people," Leader said.

TIP's work in public opinion research, media outreach and advocacy with leaders and opinion makers, operate in seven languages and in China, Russia, India, Europe and Latin America, in addition to the United States. Its Arabic "People to People" peace program has achieved unprecedented results throughout the Arab world.

Mizrahi will leave the organization on July 1 and plans to establish a communications consultancy focusing on advocating for the rights and needs of special needs children. She will retain an advisory role with TIP.

"The Israel Project is well poised for a new CEO who will take it from strength to strength. Anybody familiar with our work knows that TIP is much more than just one person," she said.

"Amazing ideas are coming from all parts of the organization and the responsibility for programmatic activities lie with our many talented managers. We have recruited a series of high-profile stars who today run our independent business units."
